

A Corporate Strategy For Rising Interest Rates

Having borrowed heavily in the bond markets in the past couple of years. If interest rates should rise substantially, a corporate CFO might be tempted to buy back their company's debt at below par and retire its debt. Its an interesting way of making money without producing a single widget.

One wonders how significant this impact could be. It certainly won't hurt to own the equity.